

I was sitting on a train once when I noticed this mobile phone on the floor. I looked around but I couldn't see anyone nearby who could have dropped it.

After about ten minutes, I decided to pick it up. It looked quite new and it was still on. Curious to see who might have dropped it, I scrolled through the address book and opened a text message but it was in a language I couldn't understand. Eventually, I decided to send a message in English to a couple of the names in the phone book. I wrote, "Please tell the owner of this phone to call me" then I added my mobile number. I didn't hear anything for a while, but just as I was getting off the train, the phone rang. I answered and a woman's voice in English said, "Hello, I think you've got my phone !" I explained what had happened and she asked me to wait at the station café so she could come and pick up the phone. An hour later she arrived. And that's how I met my wife, Olga.

Let's break down the text using the questions "who," "what," "when," "where," "why," and "how" :

1. Who?

The narrator (the person telling the story) and eventually, a woman who turns out to be the owner of the phone.

2. What?

The narrator finds a phone on the floor of the train, sends a message to the contacts in the phone, and later meets the owner, who becomes his wife.

3. When?

The events happen while the narrator is sitting on a train, with specific moments like when the phone is found, when messages are sent, and when the owner calls right before the narrator gets off the train.

4. Where?

The main setting is a train, and later, a station café where the narrator waits to meet the owner of the phone.

5. Why?

The narrator picks up the phone out of curiosity and a desire to return it to its owner, leading to the eventual meeting with the woman who owns it.

6. How?

The narrator takes action by scrolling through the phone's contacts, sending messages to a few names in the address book, and communicating with the owner via phone call. Eventually, they meet at the station café, leading to the start of a relationship.
